Our Speaker: Steve McDonald

For six years now, Steve McDonald has owned Turfgrass Disease Solutions, which conducts research trials and serves as an agronomic resource for turf managers in the mid-Atlantic region. He holds degrees from both Delaware Valley College and the University Of Maryland, where he served as a research assistant to Dr. Peter Dernoeden.

Steve's experiences also include an internship at the USGA Green Section, as well as serving as Assistant Superintendent to Mike McNulty at Philadelphia Country Club. He and his wife Beth have one daughter, Nola.

Steve's presentation is titled "Insects, Weeds, and Diseases that are Hitting Now and in the Future."

Our Host: Todd Bidlespacher

Todd Bidlespacher came to Lancaster Country Club six years ago from Kirtland Country Club in Wiloughby, OH (1996-2003). Previous work experience includes positions at Hershey Country Club and The Country Club [Cleveland].

Todd holds a B.A. in economics from West Virginia University and a two-year certificate from Penn State. He and his wife Kelly have two daughters: Julia, age 11, and Alea, age 9.

The Course: Lancaster Country Club

Slated to host to the 2015 U.S. Women's Open, Lancaster Country Club is now a 33-hole private club. The original course was designed in 1920 by William Flynn.

Recently, the club completed a course restoration, working with Flynn specialists: Ron Forse and Jim Nagle. While the paramount concern was maintaining the integrity of Flynn's design, they also strove to enhance playability and improve course infrastructure.

The assistant superintendents are Mike Yelenosky, Chet Brubaker, and Nevin Hess.
